Cornwell Badge For Welsh Scout

FOR more than 20 years the boys of Abergele Sanatorium, North Wales, have had a Scout Group. Now one of their Patrol Leaders, 14-year-old Gerald Winterburn, having spent more than half his life there, has been awarded the "Cornwell Scout" Badge.

Gerald, a First Class Scout, holding his First Aid and Jobman's badge, was first admitted to the sanatorium having injured his leg in 1942, and developed a serious condition of the spine. By 1946, he was transferred from a spinal frame to a plaster jacket which he wore for another four years.

After eight years treatment he was able to get about with the aid of crutches: but recently he has developed paralysis of his legs and is now immobilised in a plaster bed.

When the other boys have gone to camp he has never shown any sign of envy; and when his only sister died at Christmas he did not cry because he did not want the others to be unhappy.

When he was very young and undergoing painful treatment he would ask the nurse to describe her day off, saying: "If you talk to me it doesn't hurt so much."

"By his example" wrote the Medical Superintendent, "other patients have been enabled to endure their suffering more easily."

Lord Kenyon, Scout Chief Commissioner for Wales will present the badge to Gerald at the Sanatorium on January 27th.
